Hormonal level and genetic polymorphism of CYP17 gene affect bone mineral density in Brazilian women. The role of CYP17 gene in the regulation of bone metabolism was studied in Brazilian women in relation to body mass index, waist-hip ratio, level of 17-OH progesterone, and genetic polymorphism of CYP17. Blood samples were obtained from 90 women, who answered a questionnaire and underwent anthropometric measurements. Bone mineral density was assessed by DEXA. CYP17 genotyping was performed by PCR-RFLP. Multivariate analysis was performed to analyze the factors that affected bone mineral density. The sample of 90 women was distributed into the following groups: (a) AA (n = 26); (b) AC (n = 40); and (c) CC (n = 24). The levels of 17-OH progesterone were higher in the carriers of polymorphic alleles, however, they were unrelated to bone mineral density. There was a positive correlation of level of 17-OH progesterone with genetic polymorphism of CYP17. Women with polymorphic alleles of CYP17 had lower bone mineral density when compared to those women with the homozygous wild-type. In conclusion, the results showed that the carriers of polymorphic alleles of CYP17 may have increased bone loss. A Shropshire-based activist group has released images of a man they claim to be a war criminal. They say that the man - believed to be Colin Lucas - is part of the E4M (Extermination of the European race) network, an organisation which they claim is responsible for mass murder and forced sterilisation of millions of women and children. "For years we've been hearing that the Nazis were responsible for mass killings, torture and the murder of millions of people, but now we know that the police, the army and the media are committing genocides on their own people," the group says on their website. "Now it is time for E4M to be held responsible for his crimes. He has taken advantage of our justice system, using his position and funds to avoid justice. The group says that Lucas has been living in secret "for years" but they have released a number of images of him for "one and all to see what they have done". The group claims that Lucas is a former MP for the Conservative Party, the "general manager" of the English National Party and the chief of
